MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

Mrs. Lander as "Mary Stuart," Last evening, at the Walnut Street Theatre, Mrs. Lander appeared as "Mary Stuart," in Mrs. Kemble's elegant and poetical translation of Bohiller's tragedy. If the "Elizabeth" of Giacometti's play requires a wide range of ability in the actress, the "Mary Stuart" of Schiller, in our opinion, requires talents of a higher order for a successful representation. "Elizabeth" is far from being an indifferent plece work, and the dramatist has fairly accomplished all that he undertook to do, but it will not bear a comparison with such ;a finely finished, chaste, and classic production as Schiller's Mary Stuart. And yet Eltzabeth is the best of the two for stage purposes, and the want of animated action in Behiller's tragedy will always prevent it from being popular as an acting drama. An inferior actress can never succeed in it, and it is only when an artist of the first class undertakes to represent the beautiful and unfortunate Scottish Queen that playgoers are likely to be tempted to the theatre to witness the play. Within a year past we have had an opportunity to see three actresses of first-rate ability, and of three different nationalities, in the role of "Mary Stuart," and in no other of the numerous characters assumed by them have any of them made a more favorable impression than in this. Of the three, Ristori is the most regal and stately, Janauschek the most passionate, and Mrs. Lander the most tender and womanly. It is in the first act that Janauschek excels, for her intensity and powerful style gives an animation to the scenes which is needed to relieve the monotony and deficiency of incident. In the famous quarre scene in the third act, and in the pathetic pasgages in the last act, when the "Queen" bids farewell to her faithful servants and confesses to "Melvil," Janauschek is surpassed both by Ristori and Mrs. Lander, and the performance of the last-named lady is, as a whole, fully equal to that of the other artists we have While looking at Mrs. Lander's personation of the Scottish Queen in her last bitter hourswe could not help thinking how fine it would be to see a really great actress undertake the part of "Mary Stuart" in Swinburne's Chaster lard. That this play will ever be put upon the stage we have no reason to expect: it was not written for representation, and it would probably be impossible to relieve it of its verbiage, obscurities of diction, and other Swinburnian peculiarities, so as to make it understandable to an ordinary audience. The subtle portrait of the Northern syren who won men's hearts to destroy them is a wonderful effort of true genius, whether we admit its historical correctness or not; and in the hands of as fine an artist as Mrs. Lander it could not fail to make a powerful impression. We do not make these remarks with any intention of suggesting an adaptation of Swinburne's tragedy for the stage, for we do not believe that such an adaptation could be made without rewriting the whole piece, and thus destroying all its finer characteristics, but it would be a boon indeed if the greatest of the young posts of the day would give the stage the benefit of his fine genius, and produce actable plays on this and other subjects of equal interest.

"Leap Year" at the Arch.

Buckstone's very entertaining play of Leap Year, which was performed at the Arch Street Theatre last evening, is a three-act farce rather than a legitimate comedy. The plot, the incl dents, and the characters are as eccentric as the subject. It affords ample opportunities for some capital comic acting; and while it could scarcely fail to excite uproarious laughter if at all well represented, the performers must be gifted with rare discretion and good taste if they desire to leave a really pleasant impression on the minds of the audience. The ladies and gentlemen of the Arch Street Theatre Company acquitted themselves in all respects as well as could be desired; the farcical spirit of the play was subdued rather than exaggerated, and the acting was elegant and artistic, so that all the ludicronsness of the piece was brought out, and the audience kept in the best possible humor by the fun of the thing, without being displeased by any vulgarity. The idea of ladies taking advantage of the traditional privileges of leap year could easily be made the vehicle of coarse humor, and the situations of Buckstone's play require much nice tact and discretion on the part of the actors to give the performance a genuine comedy air. This was done, however, and the pleasure of those who sat before the curtain was certainly not diminished to humanity in their delineations of the eccentric specimens of human nature sketched by the dramatist.

The part of "Mrs. Flowerde v" was performed with a great deal of delicacy and refinement by Miss Price, who did not forget that she was representing a lady even when making a proposal of marriage to her footman. Mr. Barton Hill is entitled to equal commendation for his persona tion of "Walker." This character offers many temptations to the actor to commit extravagances, and Mr. Hill showed the spirit of a true artist in making the hero of the piece at all times a gentleman in spite of his livery, and in spite of the license for exuberant acting which might be deduced from the text.

The gems of the performance, however, were the "Miss Desperate" of Mrs. Thayer and the "Sir Solomon Solus." of Mr. Mackay, Mrs. Theyer is always good, but in a purely comic role it is difficult to find her equal among the 'old women" of the stage. Her ' make up" as "Miss Desperate" was capital, and her acting was as funny as her personal appearance. Mr. Mackay is also an excellent actor, and in the ordinary run of "old man" parts he has few superiors. In eccentric characters, however, he does not often have an opportunity to distinguish himself, and the admirable manner in which he brought out the strong points of

"Sir Solomon" is worthy of special mention. "Miss O'Leary" is not as prominent as some of the characters which Mrs. Drew has been representing during the week, but her acting was all that could be wished for, Mr. Craig was also good as "Mr. Dimples" and the same may be said of Mrs. Maeder as "Mrs. Crisp." The minor parts were well fliled, and the play throughout was acted in a very spirited

THE RAILROAD ACROSS THE CONTINEST .- The Sterrra Nevada and Rocky Mountain ranges have been crossed by the locomptive this summer Five years of patient drilling and blasting, and thirty odd illions of money, have been required to cross the Sierra Nevadas; but on the 20th of June last the mine s of the far-famed Washoe Region ware, for the first time, placed within twenty-four hours' ride of San Francisco. Once emerged fr m the granite moutain excavations, the Central Public Company. who have in charge that end of the line, have made moutain excavations, the Control Pacific Company, who have in charge that end of the line, have made remarkable headway along the Truckee and Huncoldt vaileys, the two streams traversing the Satlake Basin in a general cast-and west direction. The track is already inid 200 miles can of the mountains, and is still extending at the rate of sixty to seventy-five miles a month. Twelva inousand men are employed at the work, grading, track-laying, and hunling the substance forward. Of course, it requires immense resources to reed such an army and keep it at work. To have the materials at the right places, and at the propertures, requires comprehensive foreight as well as great energy.

The rapid progress of the work equales the Company to dispose of its bonds as fast as the money is needed, and every additional mile completed of course enhances the value of the security.

The Central Pacific Railroad is now completed 30 miles cast of Sacramento, or to a point within 300 miles of Salt Lake. This is an advance of 200 miles within the last three mouths. The road has occur doing a large commercial business at the same time.

The prospect seems fair that we shat have the continuous rall isid between the two occass before next year, and possibly within twelve moaths heace. It is not often that railroad corporations go abrad of their promises, or of the public expectations, but the Pacific Railroad Companies are really doing 40. They are required by their charter to complete the through line by July, 1874, and will do it five years scower, One of the stimula it g motives for this extraordinary energy is no doubt found in the provision which authorizes the line to be built from opposite ends towards a meeting point, each company to own and control as much as it builds, and to receive the lands and bougs thereon. Besides this a large flow of travel and traffic may be expected when the sine is opened throughout. The Pacific Railroad.
